E-Safety : Understanding what children get up to online

You don't have to be an internet expert to discuss internet safety with your child, but you do need to understand what kind of activities they may be getting up to online, and the potential dangers associated with them.

As well as researching homework, they're likely sharing photographs, watching videos, and playing online games with others. They could be chatting to strangers on internet forums or communicating with fellow gamers.

Though it can be fun and informative, the internet is a scary place. Issues such as child abuse, cyberbullying, computer viruses, identity theft and many more can rear their ugly heads.

What's more, your child is at risk of being exposed to inappropriate, disturbing and age-restricted content, such as pornography, or information about sensitive subjects such as self-harm or eating disorders. It goes without saying that at an impressionable age exposure to this type of content can do a lot of harm, so you may also wish to look into parental controls, which restrict access to unsuitable content.
